The best of the Cognitive Institute's education delivered through an intensive training experience.

One-on-one training is suitable for any doctor or healthcare professional requiring individualised coaching to address specific areas of concern or performance. Ideal for participants who may struggle to identify the reason why they are facing challenges, the training helps to recognise and address issues in a discrete face-to-face format.

Target Audience

Any healthcare professional requiring individualised coaching to address specific areas of concern can participate in One-on-One training. These training events are suited to professionals needing increased motivation to engage and address issues of concern. Often these issues are not suitable to address in a group environment.

Duration

This training is usually structured over a whole day but can be offered in a half day format depending on the participant's training needs.

OVERVIEW

Concentrated teaching and training time with a skilled educator drawing on the wide range of course materials available at the Cognitive Institute enables participants to develop competence in a variety of areas.

The Cognitive Institute provides the referring organisation with a needs analysis questionnaire which assists in selecting the most appropriate course materials for the training. A skilled Cognitive Institute educator works with the participant to identify individual training needs and challenges including barriers to change. Intensive coaching involves tailoring the workshop exercises to address the specific issues that have been identified and actors are used to rehearse the skills. As a result the participant is able to identify, learn and practise strategies that can immediately be applied in the workplace.

This format is of particular value to participants who may have significant needs or who may struggle to identify the reason why they are facing challenges.

One-on-One training is not designed to address issues related to current or specific disputes with colleagues. Where concerns relate to doctor patient communication, potential participants or referring organisations should consider the Clinical Communication Programme as the preferred training option.
